Forecast for Wednesday 18 May 2022

Weather: Some mist around the fells around dawn and the potential for a lingering heavy shower but more likely to be dry. Most cloud clearing to leave a bright and dry morning with long sunny periods. Clouding over during the afternoon and winds easing for a time. Likely to stay dry until late evening when a squally band of heavy rain will move east across the area.

Chance of cloud-free hill tops above 800m: 60% improving to 90% for most of the day.

Low cloud and visibility: Some early mist and low cloud will shroud the fells, with scattered cloud around 6-700m. This cloud will thin and lift with all the fell tops becoming clear for most of the day. Visibility may be poor in places at the start of the day with some lingering mist but it will soon improve to leave good views around the Lake District for the day. During the evening the visibility may dip moderate or poor for a time as squally rain moves east.
